

Barbara Sieck Taylor is a development consultant, specializing in the cultural community and public broadcasting. She is currently Project Director of the Disability Health Policy Forum at Achieva, one of southwestern Pennsylvania's leading providers of lifelong services and supports to people with disabilities and their families. For the past five years, she has also served as the principal administrator of Conductive Education of Pittsburgh, a grassroots, parent-driven organization. She is the parent of a 14 year old son, William, who has cerebral palsy and has been very active in the advocacy and coordination of his medical and educational services.